Keep a Pulse on Student Online Behavior

Teachers are often the first to hear about and respond to online safety concerns and cyberbullying among students, but administrators also have an important role to play, too.

Creating a culture of awareness and prevention throughout the school can be an important step in lowering incident rates of unsafe online practices. The following suggestions can help you foster a school-wide culture of digital responsibility.

- Have informal conversations with students about their online behavior and knowledge.
- Partner with teachers to co-teach lessons about online safety or address the topic at grade-level or school-wide assemblies.
- Respond immediately when an online incident occurs and treat it seriously.
- Promote awareness campaigns with announcements and homegrown PSAs.

Access a number of tips for administrators to better understand your role in safe online behavior.