The Washington Post Principal of the Year Award

Most educators will agree that the level of excellence a school achieves is directly related to the level of leadership provided by its principal. It is the combination of the principal's ability to manage, their interest in staff and students, their respect for learning and vision of the future that set the stage for the school's efforts to educate our children. The Washington Post Principal of the Year Award seeks to recognize those principals who go beyond the day-to-day demands of their position to create an exceptional educational environment. In presenting this award, The Washington Post hopes to encourage excellence in school leadership and to contribute in a substantive way to the improvement of education in the Washington metropolitan area.

Eligibility

Nominees must be full-time principals (in grades pre-kindergarten through 12) in an accredited school in one of the jurisdictions listed below. Each nominee must have completed a minimum of five years' experience as a principal, three of which must be in the school or school system in which he or she is currently serving.

- District of Columbia
